

CONTEXT FOR ASTRA

You are my German tutor. I am Kevin, Italian, level A2-B1. My lessons are taught in English by a native German speaker (Stefanie). Today we are reviewing: Infinitive Constructions with zu

Sections covered: 23. Infinitivkonstruktionen

LESSON SUMMARY

Kevin practiced infinitive constructions with zu and um...zu. The lesson clarified three patterns: 1) es ist + adjective + zu + infinitive (statements), 2) certain verbs (vergessen, versuchen) + zu + infinitive, and 3) haben + noun (Zeit, Lust, Angst) + zu + infinitive. A key distinction was made between um...zu (goal-oriented: 'in order to') and simple zu (descriptive: 'to'). Stefanie explained holen vs. nehmen: holen means 'to go get' (movement required), nehmen means 'to take' (no movement). She also covered abholen (to pick up people), and ins vs. zum Fitnessstudio (inside vs. at the door). Kevin raised concerns about Preply's lesson expiration policy and proposed switching to direct payments via PayPal or Revolut to avoid platform fees and taxes.

GRAMMAR POINTS

Infinitive with zu: es ist + adjective + zu + infinitive

→ This construction is used to make general, impersonal statements about what is important, nice, necessary, difficult, etc. The structure follows the pattern: es ist + adjective + comma + zu + infinitive. The infinitive clause describes or explains the evaluation expressed by the adjective. This is equivalent to English 'it is + adjective + to + verb'.

e.g. Es ist wichtig, viel Wasser zu trinken. (It is important to drink a lot of water.)

e.g. Es ist billiger, den Regionalzug zu nehmen. (It is cheaper to take the regional train.)

Infinitive with zu after certain verbs (vergessen, versuchen)

→ Many German verbs require an infinitive clause with 'zu' to complete their meaning. These verbs introduce a subordinate infinitive clause that describes an action related to the main verb. The structure is similar to English 'to + verb' constructions. The infinitive with zu always goes to the end of the clause, and the clauses are separated by a comma when the infinitive clause contains additional elements.

e.g. Ich vergesse immer, Wasser zu trinken. (I always forget to drink water.)

e.g. Ich versuche, immer den Bus zu nehmen. (I try to always take the bus.)

Infinitive with zu after haben + noun (Zeit, Lust, Angst)

→ When the verb 'haben' is combined with certain nouns (Zeit, Lust, Angst, Möglichkeit, Gelegenheit, Recht, etc.), it triggers an infinitive clause with 'zu' to express having time, desire, fear, opportunity, or right to do something. This construction creates a two-part predicate where the noun specifies what you 'have' and the infinitive clause describes the action.

e.g. Ich habe keine Lust, Deutsch zu lernen. (I don't feel like learning German.)

e.g. Ich habe Angst, im Meer zu schwimmen. (I'm afraid to swim in the sea.)

um...zu construction for expressing purpose or goal

→ The 'um...zu' construction expresses purpose, intention, or goal - meaning 'in order to' in English. This structure indicates that the action in the main clause is performed with the intention of achieving the action described in the infinitive clause. The subjects of both clauses must be the same; if they differ, use 'damit' + subordinate clause instead.

e.g. Man muss gesund essen, um gesund zu leben. (One must eat healthily in order to live healthily.)

e.g. Ich gehe in die Küche, um Wasser zu trinken. (I go to the kitchen to drink water.)

holen vs. nehmen: movement distinction

→ The verbs 'holen' and 'nehmen' both relate to taking or getting something, but they differ crucially in whether movement is required. 'Nehmen' means to take something that is within reach or immediately available (no significant movement needed). 'Holen' means to go and get/fetch something from another location (movement required). The separable verb 'abholen' specifically means to pick up someone or something, usually implying you will bring them/it somewhere else.

e.g. Ich hole Wasser aus der Küche. (I'll get water from the kitchen - requires walking to another room.)

e.g. Ich nehme das Glas. (I take the glass - it's right in front of me.)
